

Device for Error Detection and Locking of Power Breakers

Abstract

A device for error detection and mutual locking of at least two switches that sequentially connect motors to a converter has a converter sending switching signals to the at least two switches. The converter, prior to each switching action, checks a switched-off state of all of the at least two switches. The converter performs a current measurement for checking the switched-off state.